Description

Bloggers often have blogs that are about them, rather than about a topic. But within their blog, individual posts should be categorized by topic(s). I.e., it's the post, not the blog, that's the right unit of categorization.

I have seen a RFE for this on tikiwiki.org, where there's an interesting page on Tiki Blog suggestions of vintage about 2004. See <http://tikiwiki.org/tiki-index.php?page=BlogIdeasPaulap>. Possibly we should make a pass over this page and either add these suggestions as tracker items or identify them as out-of-date.

I think using Freetags would manage the same effort, but to come closer to other blogging solutions the blog needs an own Freetags browser, which allows to "sort" all posts with specific tags (and all in the suitable design for the blog).

Thinking of something like a tag cloud above (and/or below) and with one click on a tag, all posts with this tag are shown. And the look stays the normal blog look and not like a search page as normal Freetags browser looks alike.
