Description
    Trackers are powerful. But there is no built-in version history like the wiki pages and the spreadsheet. A workaround is to watch the tracker and have the history in your inbox. You can also permit users to comment the tracker item instead of editing it.

    A real history, accessible via the interface would be nice to have. Please see SourceForge trackers for an example.

    Adding a field "Edit Summary" would be useful for this history.

    Low-hanging fruit solution is to copy the diffs (that we already send by email but should be improved: Trackers :: email notifications of changes :: more emphasis on changes.) to a new "history" tab.

    More work would be an interface to revert to a previous value, which could be nice-to-have but too complex.

    Tracker field type: wiki page

Solution
    It has been added to Tiki6 but it not very reliable so leaving in pending

    Recent versions are good.

Workaround
    Use an email inbox as a backup

This is an important feature for auditing purposes. It is important to have the system log the date, time, userid and actions performed on the tracker item.

... I'll leave the ticket open because the feature is not really as good as it should be
