Description

To be able to post picture in blog you need to have tiki_p_upload_picture rights.

tiki_p_upload_picture perm is stored in "Wiki" permissions section.

This lead to confusion.

If it is to stay like this (no need for a new perm) it should available in both section i guess.

This is user interface and usage, no bug involved here.

Solution

Well not sure neither, but it is not logical to set blog feature, set blog feature permissions, and getting an error if trying to upload an image because a permission in the wiki section (not related) is not check.

May be they are simple things to do is:

1/ Make this perm available in permission section blogs AND wiki.

2/ Keep it in wiki section but add a note in the blog section (if you need files/picture to be upload able in the blog text area you will have to allow "tiki_p_upload_picture" in the wiki section.

3/ Move the permission to Tiki section (being able to upload an image in any text area of the Tiki).

Bernard,

What image upload are you talking about? Using the Editor? From my knowledge, images through the editor require File Gallery permissions.

If there is another type of blog upload then we should probably look at removing it if it duplicates functionality.

I'm just not clear what section of the blog you are talking about

Hi Pascal,

Insert a picture in a post blog using the wysiwyg editor require an perm that is in the "file gallery" perm section.

From the end-user point of view it is not obvious to go check the upload file perm in the files gallery section to upload an image in a blog post (File gallery is ON by default) so he may be even not aware of the file gallery feature and what it is for.

This is pure UI, no bug involved here.
