Description
    When using tiki-print.php the page's real name is displayed instead of its alias. This is probably caused by the same regression which caused real names to be displayed as the page title instead of the alias as was addressed in this bug report that has been completed.

    I believe that the fix implimented in the bug report linked above does not remedy this, as I applied that fix to one of my local installs and the problem was still there.

    I think the reason this happens is because the code that sets the page title as an alias gets that information from the structure_path object that is somehow tied to the breadcrumbs module, and the breadcrumbs module is absent when viewing the page content through tiki-print.php.

    Possible solutions would include getting access to alias information through another way (generating a structure_path object on the fly if one does not exist), or perhaps simply generating breadcrumbs on the tiki-print.php page to have access to the object and setting their visibility to hidden.
