Description

When viewing a tracker on a wiki page, an extra word 'Label' is showing in Tiki 15x (12x this is not / never was a problem). Is there any way to hide this word? It seems to be something in the back-end.

Pic of how it was before in Tiki 12x:

Pic of how it looks now in Tiki 15x:

Parameters:

- browser: Opera mini (& beta mini), with parameters (very important) -
 - 1) single column view (Settings > Page Layout > Single column view)
 - 2) extreme mode data savings (Settings > Data savings > Extreme mode)
 - 3) no images (Settings > Data savings > Images > off)(all versions of Opera mini to through latest, v.21 & v.22)

- Android 5 and 6

I understand that most people do not use Opera mini, particularly with these parameters (which strip out all formatting for fast loading under 2G/GPRS environments), and this is a minor annoyance that users can get used to, but submitting as maybe it's an easy fix (this does not occur in any other browsers, or Opera Mini if 'Extreme Mode' data savings is turned off).

Thanks,
Mike

When you say "viewing a tracker on a wiki page", what do you mean exactly? Content from a trackerlist plugin? I'm trying to reproduce the error with Opera Mini on iPhone 6 (I don't have an Android device).

Hi Gary,

sorry, poor use of words - when PluginTracker is inserted into a wiki page (for gathering information/data). (so not PluginTrackerList)

Unfortunately, the Apple version of Opera does not have the two necessary parameters:

- 'single column view' which not only puts the entire web page in one column, but also strips out 99% of all formatting
- 'Extreme Mode' (which allows choosing 'no pictures' mode)

I see. It's good to have the feedback, but I imagine this is such an edge case that it's not likely to get much attention, especially if devs don't happen to have the device to test with.
