Description
 Using the native Geolocation feature for Articles, Wiki Pages, Blogs, etc, once a geolocation is assigned, using edit properties, you can change the location, but you cannot detach a location.
 Sometimes, a location may be accidentally added, but one should not be a part of that page.

 In my case, I have wiki page templates, I accidentally assigned that template a location, and now the template shows up on my map. There is no way to detach the geolocation from a page, article or blog.

 Tried to create a Show Instance, but it's not working.

Show instance created, please see home page.

Just a heads up, I was playing with uploading some images to this show instance, and the images are acting very funny, see show instance home page, the image is glitching badly, all images I have uploaded to this show instance are glitching, the graphics are very funny.

Thanks a lot for this report about images getting scrambled.
This seems related to a recent regression on file storage in the database (as opposed to on the file system). It's being discussed now.

Sorry, no insight about the geolocation issue.

No problem Jean, you'll also notice that when you toggle "Edit Icons" on, you cannot shut them back off. Just another issue I saw this morning in this show instance.

Good day folks, just going through some of my bugs and wishes and wondering if anyone had any further feedback on this issue? Cannot un-assign geolocation from wiki page. Thanks!

John Morris 22 Jan 22 16:48 GMT-0000

Bringing back to the top, it's still true, you cannot un-assign an item from geolocation. You can change the location, but you cannot take it off.

Just curious if this has been looked at lately? Thanks gurus!
