Description

If a wiki page is included in a structure, Tiki lists the page when viewing the structure (or when listing TOC) — even if the user does not have permission (`tiki_p_view`) to actually view the page. This presents an invalid structure to the use — they are seeing pages that they do not have permission to view. Tiki should only show pages (in a structure) that you can actually view.

Alternative impelentaion (proposed by luciash):

To have an option "restricted pages in this structure will be ommited from the list" or "will be shown but marked as restricted"

Confirmed in 1.9.8 and 1.10.1

I would like the alternative implementation proposed by luciash, because it gives the possibility e.g. to show anonymous the whole content of your site, but grant only registered to use it all.

I noticed in 6.1 that my module showing a structure only showed the pages anonymous could see, so this is at least partially fixed.

I think this should be the default behavior, as it conforms to WYSIWYCA.

Although, perhaps the reason for this was that I had only given Can watch structure (tiki_p_watch_structure) permission to registered users.

As per Tiki23 when a page in a structure is not visible for a group (permission) then it won't be listed as part of the structure avoid a click to a page the user doesn't have the right to see the page.
