Just use the new rel-syntax in Wiki-links (needs to be fixed a bit still).

This also generically allows for other kinds of microformats - see the rel-Microformats on: http://microformats.org/wiki/Main_Page

What - all of them? Seems a bit harsh on all external links from wiki pages (agreed a good idea from comments, shoutbox etc) Or maybe i misunderstood?

Hmm - sounds like another checkbox to me (i.e. bad) - "add 'no follow' tags to external links created by users not in this group..." - tee hee!

(oh why do i always seem to make things more complicated?)

Talking of which; no preview on tracker comments? 🤓

The tracker item is not clear enough.

We must not add rel="nofollow" to all links.

Adding rel="nofollow" to links from user-content (comments etc) may/shall be optional. Not in all cases is it reasonable to add them. Eg, with a closed community where you trust everyone and know they're providing quality content the attribute would be harmful.

Also, it would have to be a section/module-specific setting at least, if not item.
Itâ€™s not reasonable to use it on wikis.

Kissaki 26 Jul 09 11:27 GMT-0000

Never.
Please add tracker items reasonably.

Site-wide no follow option is available starting in Tiki5, and on by default
