Description

Today, once someone has replied to a survey, he cannot change his mind on the given answers if he has made mistakes. So, when returning to the survey menu, there is no other choice but to list the results.

Solution

Actually, the problem is that answers are aggregated to one table :
tiki_survey_question_options
and no tracking is done as to who has answered what (unlike polls)

The only advantage (for some people) is that surveys are by design `_anonymous_` but most of the time, users do want to change their answers.

So the solution would be to add a tracking table allowing the admin (or everyone) to know who gave which answers, and then provide users to change it while the survey is still open.
