Description
Steps to reproduce:

Use admin rights for the following steps

1. Create at least 2 categories
2. Give Registered (default no rights changed) User group access to one of them and deny access to the other
3. Now create 1 Wiki site in each Category
4. Link both pages from the tiki.index.php via Wiki link

5. Log in as the Registered user now
6. Try viewing both Sites via the Wiki link on one u get the error that u dont have permission to do so
7. Now click on the Link
Create this page (page will be orphaned)
8. Now u can view the page even though u arent allowed to do so
9. Uncheck the category change the site and u are even able to save the edits u did even though u dont have permission to do so

Solution
One very simple solution is to browse the error.tpl file under \templates and go to line 53 and edit the if statement by deleting "$tiki_p_edit eq 'y'" from the if statement which results in the link for editing the page not showing up instead a correct error message shows up. Even though this doesnt fix the main security problem its a workaround and a starter for debugging

In fact a simple tiki-editpage.php?page=aPageWithAcategoryYouCan'tEdit was a security home
Fixed in 1.9.2

Ive always said since teedog did the categ perms that they shouldnt be trusted. Which is why I was prompting security audits before 1.9.0 was released. But as no-one was listening ....
