Description

under admin permissions:

If you edit a wiki page with a wiki rating, the old poll is deslected and a new poll is made with the generic name 'rate it'.

This means the scores are reset to zero and the admin has to edit the page again and reselect the old poll.

under registered permissions:

If you edit a wiki page with a wiki rating, the old poll is deslected and the page doesn't have a rating anymore.

Wiki ratings is a very nice feature, but this is a showstopping bug.. I hope it isn't too hard to fix ;).

Solution

This is not a showstopper - but it is CONFIRMED!

Bug or feature? ;) See comments

Update June 2007: Please re-test in 1.10cvs. It should be included that option in HEAD, right now....

Update 12/10/2007: This is now fixed in 1.9.8.3 cvs. Fix forthcoming for 1.10, but no eta as yet.

imho each wiki revision should have its own rating. To prevent content from being changed and thus a false rating, maybe it should only retain the original poll when minor edit is checked before saving.

ah yes I didn't think of that, could it be set as an admin option.. as some rating options would speak for themselves eg: what mode of transportation do u prefer? car, bike, bus.

otherwise it means an admin will have to babysit the page after every edit.

Basically, you might want to set this as an option PER PAGE by an editor. Because, sometimes, pages get ratings because of the supposed page content (e.g. a page is just important). Sometimes however, the content itself is rated. In this case a modification to a page might completely redo the content, and then, the rating is not related to the current contend.

However, you should set a default, and to me the default would be: rate the page regardless of content changes. This is propbably the one thing most users want.
