Description

entering the words "visual studio" in the search_box module causes the following message to be returned in the UI:

An error occured in a database query!

Context:

File tiki-searchresults.php

Url tiki-searchresults.php?highlight=visual+studio&where=pages

Query:

select `data` from `tiki_dynamic_variables` where `name`=?
```

Values:

0 comspec

Message:

Table 'tikidb.tiki_dynamic_variables' doesn't exist

Built query was probably:

select `data` from `tiki_dynamic_variables` where `name`='comspec'

Workaround

I prevented the crash from happening again by creating a page called "visual studio". Maybe someone started creating this page and it got orphaned or corrupted?

specific issue is resolved by my actions however cause of the original problem is unknown, so i will leave this issue open. One of my users confirmed that he accidentally typed "visual studio" into the 'quick edit' box and then shut down his browser. Even so, I would prefer this php script could be bullet proofed to not to crash if there is a titled page with no data in it.

FWIW, I created a blank page and saved it properly and this did not crash the php script when I used search_box to find that page. Likewise, by creating a page with the same name and then closing my broser I didn't see any problems with searching by that keyword
