Description

Whilst the various .tpl files associated with search do a check on the $prefs.feature_XXX when showing the drop down menu for refining the search there is no check on whether the individual user has the privilege to use the feature. Therefore menu options can be shown that are not appropriate.

Also the drop down menus are slightly different for the three different .tpls files

No longer relevant - 15th June 2013

Solution

mod-search_box.tpl
tiki-searchresults.tpl
tiki-searchindex.tpl

updated and attached as proposed patch

-----
I do not agree with the test about permission as a general solution.
For instance - tiki_p_view can not be set globally, but some pages can have special permissions.
Perhaps we need a global setting. But this is not general at all.
Otherwise I agree with the missing tracker - and calendar options. I committed it. Thanks doh! yep you are right this isn't a general solution - I guess I have been steered by my own use of tiki where I avoid using individual permissions and actually I don't let clients/users do that except where it is unavoidable. Instead I always try to use Categories that implement an agreed security policy (for access control that is).

On balance I think the patch could suit some users since showing Feature buttons that the user may not even know about, may be a 'greater problem' than missing some items in a search that have had their permissions individually set.

Need to think harder though since a generic solution should probably still not show the Feature buttons but should include individually 'permitted' items. hmmm tricky!
