Description
Copied some suggestion I just throwed on irc..., after fighting each time on some of my production sites to manually send messages to many users which are kind of lost some times at the beggining of their participation in a tiki-site-powered community.

> (11:45:22) xavi: oh well, I can't code php+mysql myself (yet, at least ;-)), but I guess that this shouldn't be that difficult nor time consuming to an experienced coder, provided that that person agrees on that this feature is "low hanging fruit" to improve the experience of newcomers to a community, through improving the communication while the first steps of that person in the community site...

This could also be important for Workspaces, and Organic Groups. So that, not just to register (join the registered group), but as a customized message per group, so that, when joining a new group (at registration time, or later on through the subscribe groups plugin), you get the specific message with hints, links and remindings of things adapted for that group.

Why not put all the email template content in the DB, then provide an admin panel to customize any/all of the emails?

We could have a single, generic TPL for sending mail, that simply grabs the appropriate content from the DB.

well, yes, for sure, that'd be better 😃
I agree, Rick. But we need a coder to scratch our itches... and that's not easy to find, as mose always
