Description

The page of the first step in translating should be as simple as possible.

Changing the language of the existing page has nothing to do with translating the existing page, and is even contradictory, since deciding translation implies admitting the language of the existing page will not change.

It can even ruin a translation effort, if chosen by mistake.

besides, changing the language of a page should remain exceptional, and be left to editors, not to translators.

Solution

Remove the invitation to change language of the page from the standard translation process.
