Description

As of 2009-10-19, if I open a forum and click on a posting, if I click on the Reply button, nothing happens. Last week, when I clicked on that button, I was getting some kind of MySQL error message. But now, it simply does nothing.

Note that if instead of clicking on the REply button, I scroll down to the "Post new message" section (which contains a copy of the current post with a > in front of each line), I can write an answer, and click on Post and it works.

But I should be able to click on Reply.

In Tiki 3.2 also, the top post's reply button doesn't do anything, because the reply form is already visible on the page. Seems like at least it ought to link to the form. Clicking the reply button of a reply to the top post causes a page refresh and a new form that quotes the content of the post to be replied to, so this is working as expected.

Ah, I see the problem: the link on the reply button has an extra # character ("`&forumId=1##form`") which should be removed.
