Description

If you filter on a category field in trackers, you cannot edit any viewed tracker items. The system returns a SQL error because filterfield is set, and filtervalue is null. If you filter on other fields, you can save, with no errors.

I have traced the problem to the calling of `trklib->list_items` (this holds the query that fails). This function is used to call and order the other tracker items for easy pagination of the filtered tracker items after a save.

However, the real problem is that `$_REQUEST['filtervalue']` and `$tryfiltervalue` get lost in `tiki-view_tracker_item.php` when the save submit action is done on the form. Other URL query parameters appear to be stored as hidden fields on save action in `tiki-view_tracker_item`.

For whatever reason, non-array filtervalue fields (e.g. plain text fields) are remembered and thus the pagination and call to `list_items` works just fine.

However, when there is an array filtervalue (like there is with category fields), then filtervalue gets lost on the save action, and the save fails on a malformed query.

Solution

Look for `$_REQUEST['cant']` - if set, then skip listing all items. A bit of a kludge, but should work.
