Description
In the calendar, you can schedule a recurring event to happen weekly. In my particular use case we use TikiWiki for, among other things, tracking who in my department is carrying the 24/7 pager so everyone knows. There are between 5 and 7 of us depending on turnover, and we take turns holding the pager for one week at a time each.

With current functionality we must manually enter the pager schedule and re-do it should anyone quit or get hired. It would save us a lot of time if we could just say person A gets pager every 6 weeks, followed by person B, C, D, etc.

Solution
Allow for an event to recur every (X) months/weeks/days/hours, to account for events that recur in non-standard increments.

Just testing Calendar in 19alpha and hit the same limit. 🙁

I'd also like to have ability to set recurrence to every (X) months/weeks/days/hours. Moreover, e.g. my daughter has gymnastic training three times per week, so it should be possible to define which days in a week the event is supposed to occur.

Lastly, Emacs' org-mode does have ability to schedule complex things like 'last Friday in a month', but that's probably to complex to expect seeing here. 😊

However, this feature request is >8yrs old, so probably better not to hold one's breath. 😬
