Description

There was a question in the forum (by freeman57) about how to let users use their webcams to record a video to insert in a wiki page, etc. After checking around, I came across a plugin for Wordpress that does this, using Kultura: <http://wordpress.org/extend/plugins/all-in-one-video-pack/>. It would be great if someone could do a Tiki version, or equivalent, of this plugin. There doesn't seem to be any installation needed in the server except for the plugin files.

Actually I think just a subset of what's in the Wordpress plugin would be needed. That plugin includes other video and audio display options along with a TinyMCE install, which wouldn't be needed for Tiki.

This would be a nice additional feature for sites and users and would tie in well with Kultura integration.

Solution

About the interface, it seems like it could either be added as a tab on the edit page, or put in the Kultura wiki plugin's popup window (or a popup for a new plugin). Currently there is just a file requester there, to input a Kultura file Id in the Kultura plugin popup. In the Wordpress version of this plugin, after selecting the option for webcam record, you can choose the video dimensions and click start and stop (the Flash requester to access the webcam also comes up).
