Description
Problem:
Some changes in Tiki code (especially the parser) between versions cause slight changes of behavior. Devs have no comprehensive way to test the result of a change on a large data set.

We have a large data set with all *.tiki.org sites.

Similar to Pre-Dogfood servers, we could have a script which checks the HTML output for all wiki pages for a given version, and compare this to another version.

And thus, we can check if this is a desired behavior.

The HTML entities change in Tiki9 would be a great 1st test of this. It would have been nice to have it for UTF-8 changes in Tiki5 as well...

This should be done as part of the script for Pre-Dogfood servers so we have daily reports on issues. (and we know that it's the same data)

We also have Pre-Dogfood Server for testing the Jison Parser
