Description

In the admin menu, under Community, there is a "User List" item.

It links to tiki-list_users.php.

When I click on this (fresh 12.x installation, user: admin), I am returned to the Tiki homepage.

Not sure what it should do, but if no users are found .. and that's the problem, it should give a message saying so.

Solution

It's not a bug, that functionality was removed when the "friendship network" was revamped and that page became redundant. It was changed to redirect to home instead of being deleted so as to not break upgraded sites where someone upgraded on top of a previous release (not recommended).

Sorry

Workaround

"Until fixed, you can do some custom one with a wiki page and pluginMemberList or the module users_list" ~Xavier just use the php file of an older installation. Seems like the content just was forgotten in this release!

I have this problem too, but there definitely are users in this list.

Someone removed its contents in r46910, before rewriting it using the new social networking feature.
The commit message was:

Commit message from r46910

[KIL] Removing most of the old friendship feature (with intention of adding back once bases are established), converting dedicated tables to relations - using the 'follow' model as it seems to be what was in place
