The styling of the popup is provided by jquery-ui. The link to th jquery-ui CSS may be missing in some theme options, still. I'm checking on that now. I'm hoping we can replace jquery-ui with Bootstrap modal classes for cases like this.

Thanks Gary, did you manage to find a fix?

... in Tiki 12.x I have seen issue when CSS Minify was on, the jQuery UI themes did not load.

This was with Fivealive theme in 13.x ? Please check if you have CSS Minify on and a jQuery UI theme selected. It should not happen if you have Fivealive and None jQuery UI theme selected, as Fivealive already provides its own jQuery UI styles (at least in 12.x).

OK, so the mystery is solved. If I change the "None" jquery UI theme to any theme, it works ok. So it looks like in Tiki 13 fivealive-lite does not contain any jquery UI theme of its own. Makes sense?

Yes, that makes sense as fivealive-lite does not import it (perhaps too lite ? ;-))

I think if jQuery-UI is used it should @import url('fivealive/jquery-ui/jquery-ui.min.css'); and the options their own...

I didn't include the jquery-ui CSS link initially because I thought Bootstrap was meant to replace it, at least regarding visual appearance. IMO, jquery-ui conflicts with the Bootstrap appearance (not to mention being redundant code IMO), so I don't think jquery-ui should be mandatory for Tiki functionality, at least regarding visual style (I haven't looked at the FiveAlive options' jquery-ui implementation much so far but I'd prefer to stick with one framework for styling, if possible. I hope as soon as possible jquery-ui can be removed or at least reduced to just a functional rather than visual role, if that much is necessary.
