Reading a Blog

To read a blog, do the following:

1. Display the blog list (see "Viewing a List of Blog," above).
2. In the Title column, click the name of the blog you want to read. You'll see the blog's contents, as the following illustration:

Patently Effective
posted by SergeEgelman on Wed 17 Sep 2003 [06:53 UTC]
I'm reading some between the arguments. I feel that patenting can be effective a principle to use. But the Tiki administrator may have different default sort order. Note that the blog header, by default, shows the blog title, the date of creation, the date of last modification, the number of posts, the number of visits, the number of activity (by users other than the blog admin), and the blog description, if any. Some of this information might not be visible on your Tiki depending on how your administrator configured the Blog feature.

At the bottom of each blog entry, you'll see the following:

- Permalink The permalink is the unique URL of the current entry. This URL is useful for people reading the blog and would like to link to this entry in particular. With most browsers, it's possible to create a link by right-clicking the link and choosing the appropriate option (such as "Copy Link Location" from the popup menu).
- Referenced By This area indicates the number of blog pages (in this Tiki site or elsewhere on the Internet) that have linked to the current entry.
