Description

It would be great feature I think if you could quickly mention someone in the wiki pages and anywhere else using syntax like `@johndoe` and after page is saved it would make a link to their user info and send a notification to them that they were mentioned on the object.

It should also respect the "show realName" preference when enabled.

Requirements:

- Needs to check if the @ is at the beginning of line, or surrounded by whitespace to not catch regular e-mail addresses
- Needs to match only one @ followed immediately by the username (login name)
- Optionally it would be nice if it matched also mentions in common parenthesis like `(@username)` without need to surround them by space

Enabled on this site it seems to work just fine, except it does not seem to send any notifications to mentioned users, or does it? Test: Marc Laporte can you confirm?

Also TODO:

- when typing in textarea a pop-up with suggestions (from usernames and realnames as well) would be nice (something like on Gitlab or in Pade)
- when user sets his / her profile private it just shows as plaintext - maybe it could at least keep the "@" sign before the mentioned user name to make it clear it is a mention?
