Description

For 9.x and up.

Request ability to add to a wiki a spoiler.

Its very useful in a HowTo environment where the spoiler will hide code that needs to be copy/pasted so the presentation is neat.

Example:

When installing my widget, you might need to copy this code to your settings:

spoiler

BsetMultipleConfig

1001x1101

settings.ini

threebot4

0x32

0x64

/spoiler

The spoiler has a button allowing the user to click on the button so the user can copy/paste the code inside the spoiler. The user can also click on the spoiler for a second time to close it; allowing easy reading and hiding it when not needed.

Solution

either usage of the FADE plugin or the title syntax: !-title

Sorry, but what is a spoiler, in this context? Can you give a link to an example?

Browse to middle of page or enter your search term by pressing CTRL+F.

Search term: II. Quest Preparation

At the middle of the page are REVEAL hidden contents 'bars'.

You will see green content headlines :

Quest Preparation

Story Manager

Test

These are spoilers.

When you click on them you can expand them and read them. Then click on the spoiler again and they shrink back to original condition.

Very tidy and useful when handling technical information or HowTo's.

I can suggest two methods.
The fade plugin looks the most like your example:

This is the fade plugin
You can also fold a whole section

Until the next section

Note that you can access all plugins through the little (?) icon on the top right side of the edit textarea.

Or you can add it in the toolbar of the edit sections

Absolutely wonderful!😊

I was wondering why you asked me what a spoiler tag was.

Now I see we call it something different and why I did not see it in the plugins originally.

Thanks!
