Description

Firstly, this bug is being submitted assuming I am operating the editing interface correctly. The main issue is, when configuring the editor tool bar at `tiki-admin_toolbars.php` there is a drop down menu for Global, Admin, Articles, Wiki Pages. I have always assumed that when for example, I choose "Admin" from the drop down menu and I click on load to load the admin tool bar, while the "View Mode" is set to "Wiki and Wysiwyg" and if I assign specific tools to the editing tool bar while in the "Admin" preview, and click on save, then I should be able to see a different tool bar other than what a "Global" user would see in both the Wiki and Wysiwyg toolbar. This would allow me as an Admin to have the ability to use the "code" or source feature, but on the Global tool bar, the "code" or source feature would not be available to non admin users. Assuming I am correct in how I see this should work:

After customizing the tool bars for Global, and Admin while in "View Mode" for Wiki and Wysiwyg, and when I go to edit a page as an Admin using the syntax tool bar, I do not see the Admin tool bar, I can only see the Global assigned tool bar. Since Tiki15 (I never used Tiki12) I have never been able to have the option of using different tool bars as assigned at `tiki-admin_toolbars.php`

A show instance will be created to demo this bug.

Hi John

I think the Admin toolbar is for use in the admin pages, like on custom modules etc, not for the Admin group, but it's an interesting idea, maybe add that as a wish instead? (if i understood you correctly)

You did Jonny, understand me correctly. So I completely understand now.

So yes, it would make a great wish, because I feel admins should have whatever tools they need on the editor tool bar, that they may not wish the standard user to have, especially in an open wiki, where we would not want casual users and editors to have access to a source code or html tool in the editor bar, but as an admin, we want to have that tool readily available.

Thanks I'll put a wish in.
