Description

It is not possible to create or name a page "Sandbox".
If I do there is an error:

Solution

The error message is insufficient to explain what is going on.

The feature "Sandbox" and page naming shouldn't be related.

You should be able to create a sandbox page and give it the name you want... Or create a page and set this page as your sandbox.

The "Sandbox" is a wiki feature, right? (a practice/demo page where no versions are saved), so it's a reserved page name. I suppose that's why you can't create a page by that name when the feature isn't activated.

Thank you Gary, You may guess I knew there a Sandbox feature in Tiki. ;)

The everyday user may know and may not know about this still, the error message is incorrect and doesn't help him to solve this easy case without digging. (You can't name a page "Sandbox" because this is reserved for another Tiki feature...or something like would be much better)

Secondly I hate (as end user) to be "stopped" because there is a possible feature that I don't know or don't want and that may be activated one day. It is not correct and doesn't give a good impression on Tiki.

I'd prefer if we can implement a cleaner solution. (As long as the Sandbox feature is not activated user should be able to create a page named Sandbox).

Ideally a user should be able to create a page named "Sandbox" if the feature isn't being used. But what happens if he/she does and then the site admin decides the site should start using the Sandbox feature? I think the simplest solution would be to just improve the error message so the user knows why the action isn't possible.
