Description

When you edit a Wiki page, the page gets reloaded, with an additional "success" information for the user, painted in green. This success message includes the version number and a reference to the history feature.

Unfortunately the revision no. given is not the new current version number, but the old one, before the edit was done...

Not a big deal, but could be irritating to non-tech users IMHO, because if you look at the history, which is what the success info encourages, you will not find your edit under the given revision number.
