Description

When you open a file gallery, above the files stored in there are some functions for searching, and one that specifies how many results are to be displayed. The latter is misleadingly labelled "Number of lines". If you set the file gallery for list view that is correct. If you didn't, it's incorrect. In browse view your results will be in five columns, giving five lines (with the default setting of 25).

Therefore I suggest to rename this to "Number of results" which would be correct in all view settings.

The same logical error is in the properties of a file gallery, when you create one.

There you have to set "Max rows per page", which has actually, again, more correctly to be labelled "Max. results per page".

And while we're at it, there is a bubble help that for me (as a non-native English speaker) looks like a copy-and-paste-mistake. Bubble help for "Hide list view information" is "Hide file information from list view", which doesn't help very much, but at least, it's logical.

But bubble help for "Show list view information" is "Show file information from list view".

Again, I am not a native speaker, but in my understanding of English grammar that should read "Show file information in list view"...
