Description
  The format of sent newsletters is impure. Instead of real ASCII double quotes, a special character is used (0x90)

  Extract from test newsletter I sent to myself:

  <!— Start of article ->
   <h3 class="articleclip_title"><a href="http:
  </h3>

  Look closely at those double quotes (cannot underline them, or the CODE commands get ignored.

  These are typographical double quotes. I have the feature enabled. But that feature should only swap typographical characters in displayed Wiki content - not in the programming part of newsletters... !

  It's a miracle that Thunderbird renders this correctly. I am dead sure most other mail clients are not so tolerant...
