Description
In history, a user can view pages, version after version, to find a change.
He can do it using the left and right arrows when viewing a page.

In the top nav bar (t_navbar) the buttons doesn't refers to the actual page he is previewing (displayed) but to the actual version of the page published.

1. It is a bit confusing for most users are expecting unspecified-target actions to be applied to what they see.

1. First button label should be changed to "Go back to the actual page (last version)"
2. Second button label should be changed to "Edit actual page (last version)" (or eventually removed)
2. To view the source of this version of the page (if I'm looking for a plugin code or some syntax), I have to remember the page version number, go back to the page, go back to history and view the source (if available).
1. A "View this version page source" is missing

Gary may be consulted for better wording. ;-)
