Description

Tiki has the option to interact with Google Analytics.

Now the first court rulings are there: Google Analytics directly violate the GDPR, therefore they are illegal throughout the EU. Fines are VERY heavy, so this must not be taken lightly. The fines range up to 20 million Euro or 4 percent of a year's turnover (sic! Not profit!), whichever is HIGHER.

Yes, Analytics is optional, and it's the decision of an admin, correct.

But IMHO Tiki should inform the admin when he/she activates this, that compliance with current law must be observed, and that Analytics can be (very) problematic in this regard. And to be on the very safe side, IMHO there should be a checkbox that spells out as confirmation "Yes, I am aware of the compliance issues imposed by this".

Google Analytics is illegal, ruling by the French official data protection agency CNIL. Also the Austrian data protection agency DSB has ruled, that Google Analytics violates the GDPR. The Dutch data protection agency has announced it will rule similar. The German agency for IT security, BSI, has launched inquiries.

Tiki should IMHO not help admins to break the law. It should be discussed, whether the API to Google Analytics should be removed or migrated into a plugin. Yes, it is still the decision of the Admin. But IMHO Tiki should not assist here beyond the very basics, and only with explicit warnings, therefore IMHO a clear warning should be displayed. And to keep Tiki itself safe, IMHO the Admin should have to check a disclaimer informing of the infringement of the GDPR that could expose the Admin to legal action by his/her users or the general public.

You must not activate Google Analytics without Free, Prior and Informed Consent (FPIC) of each and every user... Free means: You cannot block access if a user declines Analytics... It's same as with cookies. Consent MUST come freely.

Also, all forms of "dark patterns" MUST NOT be used. Dark patterns means methods of deception, like pre-checked checkboxes, or OK buttons that are larger or more prominent than NO buttons.
