Description
      hman is likely the most prolific issue reporter on dev.tiki.org of recent years. He does very thorough testing and provides detailed issue reports. However, he is doing this on older versions of Tiki, which are in security-fixes only phases.

      Sometimes, the issue is already fixed in a subsequent version. Sometimes, not. If we knew this, it would save everyone a lot of time.

      If hman could set up next servers, he could easily see if a specific issue is this visible in trunk, 24x, etc.

      This is how we do it for the community:

@hman Are you up for this?

hman 18 Jul 22 13:03 GMT-0000

I am more than willing to provide testing on 21 and newer.

BUT only if I have a perspective of using 21 or newer, which frankly I do not see (at all). The blatant disregard for existing Tikis displayed when adopting Bootstrap without a migration path or conversion tool or even just a manual for DIY conversion really pd me off. Really. If that ever happens a third time (the current is already the second!) then I WILL do whatever it takes (!) to move my content and that of another dozen users from over a decade of operation on two Tikis to a different plattform that brings more "investment protection" (which is WAY more than mere money).

Marc Laporte 22 Jul 22 17:19 GMT-0000 ok, I will take that as a no.

If you really want to misinterpret my statement like that...
I repeat, I AM willing to provide testing. But I am unable.

I am not responsible for getting stuck at version 18. Tiki went incompatible to itself, which IMHO is the worst possible decision that could have been made. My testing is an output generated by me using Tiki on two productive sites.

I cannot upgrade beyond 18, and 18 will come to an end, as it does not support current PHP. Using non-current versions of PHP increases the monthly cost of running Tiki, and since both my Tikis are essentially non-profit, this limits the lifetime of the installations...
