This was recently added to 1.10 by Sylvieg And, when you rename a wiki page, the menu item is renamed as well.

Because it is too db intensive to check all the contents of trackers and forum with every rename, it is necessary to keep track of links to trackers and forums as they are created. So we will need a new table tiki_object_links which records "fromObjectID" and "toObjectID". When an object is removed using remove_object, the links are removed. For now, only if a page is involved the table is used, but in future, this could be used for all sorts of multi-format "wiki" links. Not sure if there is time to get the first part into 1.10.1, if not I would really like it to be in 1.10.2 will be great.

Hi Nelson!

I see how this can become a lot of work.

Maybe better to put the energy in page aliases or:

Done for forums and comments... Decided that tiki_object_links is too complicated and might cause more bugs. Instead, using special object link handler "page names" in the form of "objectlink:$type:$objectId". Also, expanded comment types terms from just "forum post" to "$objectType comment" (e.g. "wiki page comment")

As per Tiki23 (since a while) all backlink(ed) links are updated when renaming a page.
