Description

When a page which calls the FADE plugin is printed via tiki-print.php, the call's body is not printed by default. To print the content in my Tiki 18 and 19 installs, once I am in tiki-print.php or tiki-print_article.php, I must cancel the automatic printing, click on the label, and then have the browser print. Having revealed from tiki-index.php does not suffice.

It is arguable how much of a bug this constitutes, but the fact the hidden content is quietly hidden when printing is in my opinion already a problem. I believe if the content is not printed, there should at least be a warning displayed, and ideally an offer to reveal hidden zones ("This page contains hidden zones. Should the content of these zones be printed?").

The current way to reveal the zones - to click in tiki-print.php - is very strange, since one would not expect tiki-print.php to be interactive.

What do others think about acceptable and ideal behavior? Which behaviors do you consider acceptable, and which do you consider optimal?
